At the Institute of Archeology in Zagreb, Jere Drpić was employed in 2019 on a temporary basis in the Department for Scientific Archaeological Documentation (Arhindoks) and thus participated in systematic archaeological research and field surveys.

In September 2020, he became assistant/PhD student on the founding project of the Croatian Science Foundation titled, "Life on the Roman road - communications, trade and identities on Roman roads in Croatia from the 1st to the 8th CE - LRR, leader Ivana Ožanić Roguljić."

This project focused on the interpretation of everyday life on the Roman road in Croatia, from the beginning of Roman rule to the period of collapse, with additional focus on acculturation and integration of new identities.

In the same year Drpić enrolled in a postgraduate doctoral study of archeology, University of Zagreb.

Currently he is part of the project of the Institute of Archaeology called SirAkt, Synergy of Diversity: Archeology of Landscape and Technological Traditions in Continental and Adriatic Croatia, project leader Ivana Ožanić Roguljić.
