Bachelor's degree in Geography and History with a specialization in Prehistory and Archaeology from the Autonomous University of Madrid (June 1991), Master's degree in advanced methods and techniques of historical, artistic, and geographical research from UNED (September 2013), and PhD in Archaeology from UNED (November 2022).

Since 2008, she has been a civil servant, an archaeologist, in the Culture Department of the Regional Government of Castilla-La Mancha.

Currently, she holds the position of Head of the Heritage and Archaeology Service of the Deputy Ministry of Culture and Sports of the Regional Government of Castilla-La Mancha.

She has been part of the scientific team of the archaeological site of Sisapo since 1990, serving as scientific co-director between 1998 and 2008.

Previously, in her work in management archaeology, she has directed numerous archaeological interventions related to the drafting of Archaeological Charts, impact studies on Historical Heritage, and emergency excavations. She has also co-directed the systematic excavation of Munera Castle (Albacete) (1999-2008).

In this context, she has collaborated as a researcher on several research projects funded by various national and regional administrations whose study topics are linked to the study of mining settlements and ceramic production.
